SYNOPSIS

BETTINA explores one of the most exciting and unique artists' biographies of the 20th century. Born in West Berlin in 1947, raised in East Berlin and eventually expatriated at the age of 36, Bettina Wegner has led an eventful life. A passionate Stalin admirer as a child, she grew into a hopeful teenager wanting to shape society with her songs. Bettina not only became an inspiring musician but also a resistance fighter, committed to nobody's morals but her own. It is a story of heroism, but also of grief, devotion, ups and downs, and the futility of life. BETTINA is a movie about the life of an artist whose story, which is also the story of the 20th century, speaks to us from her soul, her thoughts and her songs.

DIRECTOR'S NOTE

I first met Bettina Wegner shortly after the fall of the Berlin Wall when I travelled from East to West Berlin, more specifically to Frohnau. It was an almost surreal encounter. We both came from the same country, yet lived in two different worlds. She knew my world, but I did not know hers. In the 30 years that followed we saw each other again at concerts or when I interviewed her, for example for the rbb-series „Berlin - Schicksalsjahre einer Stadt“.

I believe she still lives in two different worlds - here and over there - even though she might not really know where those places are. The story of the 20th century, which is closely intertwined with her own life story, deeply influences her thoughts. Every time I meet her, I meet a woman with a wonderful mixture of thoughtfulness, serenity and humor. She talks about her past with a natural sense for the absurdity that was part of everything she experienced, but never with sadness.
